Who are we?

In the psychology department, we have a training clinic that provides testing to UC students to identify learning disabilities, Attention-Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), and other issues that might make it difficult for students to achieve in school. We are made up of licensed psychologists and doctoral students training to become psychologists.

Information About LD/ADHD Assessment Services

What happens during an assessment?

Our team works with you for 3 hours to administer intelligence and achievement tests. We will also ask you to complete surveys to help us understand how things are going for you. Based on all this information, we will create a report and recommendations detailing ideas that might help you function better in school. If you wish, you can share this report with Disability Services or other people.

Do I need an assessment?

If you are struggling with your academics and think you might have a learning disability or other issue that makes it hard for you to do well in school, contact us to find out if our services are right for you.

Is there a fee for the assessment?

Although most LD/ADHD assessments cost $1000-$1500, assessments in our clinic are more affordable. The current fee for a standard assessment is $500 (payable at time of service) and includes all of the following services: interview, diagnostic psychometric assessment, report, and one feedback session. We can accept UC Student Health Insurance (if referred by UC’s Student Health Service), cash, or check. We do not have resources for billing or extended payments.

Steps to Receive an Assessment

1. Call 556-5559 and leave a message with your contact information.
2. The Assessment Clinic team will call you back and schedule your appointment.
3. Come to your scheduled 3-hour appointment.
4. Approximately one month after your appointment, come back to our office for a Feedback session in which we discuss the results and give you a report.
5. If you wish, share the report with Disability Services to get appropriate interventions and/or accommodations.
