In the Psychology Department, we have a training clinic that provides testing to UC Students to help identify Learning Disabilities, ADHD, and other issues that make it difficult for students to achieve in school. We are made up of licensed psychologists and doctoral students.

Our psychologists are specialists in the assessment and diagnosis of adult learning disabilities and ADHD.
Information About LD/ADHD Assessment Services

What happens during an assessment?
Our team works with you for 3-4 hours to administer intelligence and achievement tests. You will also complete surveys to help us understand how things are going for you. Based on all this information, we will create a report and recommendations detailing ideas that might help you function better in school. You may share this report with the Accessibility Center at school.

Do I need an assessment?
If you are struggling with your academics and think you might have a learning disability or other issue that makes it hard for you to do well in school, contact us to find out if our services are right for you.

Is there a fee for the assessment?
$100 with UC Student Health Insurance
$500 without UC Student Health Insurance
All services include: interview, diagnostic testing, report, and feedback session. We accept cash or check.

Steps to Receive an Assessment
1. Visit us online at artsci.uc.edu/dyslexia or send an email to uc.dyslexia@uc.edu
2. The Assessment Clinic team will contact you.
3. Come to your scheduled 3-hour appointment.
4. Approximately one month after your appointment, we will meet with you (phone or in-person) to discuss the results and recommendations.
5. If you wish, share the report with the Accessibility Center to get appropriate interventions and/or accommodations.
