Asian Studies

Asian Studies is an interdisciplinary major that explores the languages, cultures, economics, history, geography and politics of Asian countries. By taking courses from several disciplines, students acquire a variety of analytical tools and examine issues and problems from multiple perspectives. Expertise in languages (students are typically fluent in one or two), courses from many disciplines and study-abroad opportunities in Asia are important aspects of the Asian studies experience at UC.

Dea'jonna Tucker

Majors: Asian Studies and International Affairs

"I realized I wanted to be able to speak with people from all over the world while I studied sign language in high school. So, I chose UC because of its diversity. All my professors and advisors have been friendly and extremely helpful. I'm also president of the Japanese American Student Society, a club that promotes awareness about Japanese language and culture on campus. Being able to interact with so many exchange and international students makes me so happy. I am getting ready to study abroad in Japan for a year, which I'm thrilled about. Since coming to UC, I feel like a whole new person. I'm so much more confident, outgoing, and have developed problem-solving and communication skills. I can't wait to see how I continue to grow during my time here."
